Some Talk ie. Sundarban Island

"Sundarban" the largest delta on globe in the estuarine phase of the Ganga is a unique bio climatical zone in a typical geographical situation of the costal region of Bay of Bengal.

All of our working villages are situated in Sunderbans delta. The infrastructure disadvantage of Sunerbans is the most vital reason for its overall underdevelopment. People from far off and remote village islands are deprived of basic amenities, and whatever solution and support available is often disrupted by the vagaries of nature. The Sunderbans, in South West Bengal, where we work, with population of more than 3.5 million, under 19 Community Development Blocks, being one of the underdeveloped regions in the state.

The remoteness of the region and its topography and geography, being criss-crossed by so many turbulent rivers, creeks estuaries and channels, where transport and communication are inadequate and painfully slow, as a dictate of the region and dependent on the tidal waves, where road transport has to be combined with the water transport, denies the Sundarban people, quick access not only to the available facilities in the villages but also to the facilities available at Sub-division, district and city for their survival.
